WASHINGTON, DC—The American Psychological Association (APA) Convention is the largest gathering of researchers and practitioners in the field of psychology. This year, the convention focused on the role of cognitive appraisals in trauma recovery and the effectiveness of various interventions for reducing symptoms of posttraumatic distress. Researchers presented findings on the use of cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT) in responding to terrorism and bioterrorism-related trauma, and the development of tools to assess PTSD symptoms in college students and trauma-exposed samples.
